The convict Connor, under sentence of death for the murder of Captain Hutchinson, is to be hung on Friday next. He is but nineteen years of age, and though a hardened offender up to the time of his arrest, seems to have become quite a contrite and reasonable being. He displayed great firmness when informed of his inevitable fate, and devotes his entire time to religious reading and conversation, his spiritual adviser paying him daily visits.

Two young girls, named Emily and Mary Connor, aged eleven and thirteen years, were yesterday inveigled by the keeper of a house of ill-fame, and kept throughout the day. They were found last night by an officer, intoxicated, and LOCAL MATTERS.

Roche, and Edmund Roche, were yesterday tried for a riot. The circumstances of the case were these: Cronin was that evening married, and Roche gave the "couple" a "blow out" at his residence, near the jail. A large number of the friends of the parties were present, and after the "twain made one" had withdrawn from the observatiou and presence of the "company," and had perhaps forgotten that there was aught human on earth that could think of strife, a "divil of a row" was kicked up below stairs. The greefst had been desirable manner, Collins's celebrated "Ode on the Passions," and he was followed by Mr. J. Sheriff, who read "Cato's Soliloquy on the Immortality of the Soul" in a manner both chaste and elegant. Then succeeded a scene from the "Lady of Lyons," in which Mr. Sheriff, and Miss Renwicks of this city, took part. This fair debutante created a favorable impression at once; exhibiting, however, much modesty, which was, under the circumstances, far preferable than a confident and bold demeanor. Her greated a favorable of the Excursion of the Excursion of the Excursion of the Excursion of the greates had been desirable than a confident and bold demeanor. Her man on earth that could think of strife, a "divil of a row" was kicked up below stairs. The guests had been drinking too much happiness "to those above," and in the plenitude of their overflowing cheerfulness became hilarious, then noisy, then violent, and then engaged in a general fight, in which males and females, to the number of fifty persons, actively took part, much to the destruction of "wedding garments," as well as the disfiguration of human features. The hubbub was great, indeed for it attracted the attention of the committee and on board of the boat on the day of the Excursion. great indeed, for it attracted the attention of the watch, and roused the groom, and the latter, after a severe struggle between the charms of his bride and the attractions of a fight, unfortunately yielded to the fight; and thus, on his wedding night, aid the foundation for an appearance at court. THE WEEKLY EXHIBITION OF FRUITS AND FLOWERS yesterday was peculiarly gratifying. It was visited by many ladies and gentlemen, which is an indication that the object—to improve cul-ture—is becoming more and more popular. We noticed the names of several new contributors, among them that of Major H. C. Williams, of Fairfax county, who had quite a handsome collection of apples, plums, nectarines, and pears. Mr. David A. Hall deposited two beautiful native pine-apples; Mrs. Seaton, apples, pears, grapes, and plums; J. C. Lewis, Wm. Cammack, and Henry Pardon, some fine-looking peaches; Mr E. Tucker a very large Hunter cantelope, (which was purchased for fifty cents, and forwarded to Baltimore as a present;) Mr. A. Jardin, pears, grapes, and apples; Mr. Joseph L. Smith, pears and plums; Mr. Peter F. Bacon and Mr. John Varden, each, large and attractive plums; Mrs. Polkinhorn, balsam-ap ple and snape-beans. There were other fruits in the exhibition. Beside, there was a splendid display of flowers, of various kinds, including a rich assortment from the Government green-house, deposited by Mr. Wm. D. Breckenridge. As to the peculiar properties of the fruits we can only speak from observation, as they were placed on exhibition only to be looked
